

Greetings from Clemson! As summer approaches, we hope you are planning adventures for some great summertime fun. The majority of our students are getting ready for their summer jobs, internships and other activities. May has been filled with exciting events and new beginnings. More than 3,200 students graduated on May 9th, and as part of the three graduation ceremonies, Clemson inducted its 15th president, Dr. James P. Clements. We are extremely proud that our new president has great passion and enthusiasm for Clemson's future.

Other exciting announcements include the naming of the Founding Dean of the Eugene T. Moore School of Education, Dr. George T. Petersen, a leader in academia for the past 24 years. Clemson's School of Education is named for an alumnus, the late Eugene T. Moore of Lake City, SC. His daughter and Clemson benefactor Darla Moore said, "I believe Dr. Petersen has the background and skills necessary to bring an innovative new focus and energy to preparing teachers graduating from Clemson University to be the very best in the nation." In addition, the industrial engineering department is excited to begin the expansion of Freeman Hall to help attract top talent by creating more space for faculty and staff, adding a 108-seat auditorium and increasing room for the fast-growing online Masters of Engineering in Supply Chain and Logistics program that has been supported by Fluor Corporation. These are just a few of the great things happening at Clemson this month thanks to the generous support and commitment of donors and friends like you.

We invite you to learn more about what's happening at Clemson by visiting our website or planning a visit to campus to see the changes first hand!
